ON DEATH

Can death be sleep, when life is but a dream,
And scenes of bliss pass as a phantom by?
The transient pleasures as a vision seen,
And yet we think the greatest pain's to die.

How strange it is that man should wish to die,
And lead a life of care, but not of woe!
His rugged path, his weary, long, and dreary
His future does not seem to him to show.

John Keats
